

One limitation: since the ambassador subdomain itself isn't currently being indexed/accessed by my web search, I am basing the ambassador-specific recommendations on the program structure you've previously shared with me, plus what the main Xolace site currently communicates.

The biggest thing I see is this:

Xolace has a strong product story, but the Ambassador Program can become much more than a "people who promote Xolace" program. It can become Xolace's human distribution and community engine.

The current website positions Xolace around emotional clarity, anonymity, collective experience and trust. (Xolace Inc.) That gives you a very strong foundation for an ambassador program.

1. Stop selling the program as "Become an Ambassador"

I'd reposition the whole thing around belonging + contribution.

Instead of: Become a Xolace Ambassador

Something closer to: Help Build a World Where People Feel Heard.

Then: Xolace Ambassadors are people who believe emotional wellbeing shouldn't be something we only talk about when things get bad.

Making the program feel like a movement, rather than another campus ambassador scheme.

This is particularly important because Xolace's current brand language is already bigger than the app itself. The homepage describes Xolace as the space "before, between, and outside" therapy, social platforms and conventional support. (Xolace Inc.)

2. Make the Ambassador journey extremely clear

Right now, I would structure it as:

DISCOVER → APPLY → ONBOARD → CONTRIBUTE → GROW → LEAD

Discover

Landing page explains:

- What Xolace is
- Why ambassadors exist
- Who should apply
- What they actually do
- What they get

Apply

Short application.

Don't ask 20 questions.

Ask things like:

- Name
- Location
- School/community
- Social handles
- Why Xolace?
- What kind of content/community work do you enjoy?
- Which area interests you?

Onboard

After acceptance:

Welcome → Learn → Train → Activate

They should receive a proper Ambassador Starter Kit.

3. Introduce Ambassador Tracks

This is one of the biggest improvements I'd make.

Not everyone is good at posting.

You already have different kinds of people around Xolace, so don't force everyone into the same role.

Creator

For:

- TikTok
- Reels
- Photography
- Video
- Storytelling
- Memes

Community

For people who enjoy:

- Conversations
- Campus/community engagement
- Mental-health awareness
- Events
- Group activities

Growth

For people who enjoy:

- Referrals
- App promotion
- Campus acquisition
- Partnerships
- Outreach

Creative

For:

- Graphic design
- Motion
- Illustration
- UI/UX
- Campaign concepts

Production

For:

- Films
- Behind Her Smile
- Campaigns
- Photography

- Video production

Advocacy

For people interested in:

- Mental health awareness
- Peer support
- Education
- Workshops

This also makes the program much more attractive to people who don't want to be “the person who posts Xolace flyers.”

4. Create an actual Ambassador Dashboard

This could become a major feature.

After logging in, an ambassador should see:

YOUR XOLACE AMBASSADOR DASHBOARD

Your impact

23 people reached
8 app installs
4 referrals
3 pieces of content
1 community event

Current mission

MISSION #04

Start a conversation about something people don't usually talk about.

Complete Mission →

Resources

- Brand kit
- Social templates
- Videos

- Campaign assets
- Captions
- Product screenshots
- Ambassador guide

Community

- Ambassador announcements
- Events
- Pod discussions
- Leaderboard
- Recognition

That changes the program from “here's a WhatsApp group” into an actual ecosystem.

5. Turn your Pods into progression

You previously had:

Growth Pod

Community Pod

Production Pod

I actually think this is a very good idea.

But I'd make the progression more intentional.

Level 1 — Xolacer

New ambassador.

Learning the mission.

Level 2 — Ambassador

Consistently contributing.

Level 3 — Pod Member

Specializes in Growth, Community or Production.

Level 4 — Pod Lead

Leads a team/project.

Level 5 — Xolace Fellow

Top contributors who get closer access to the team.

This gives people something to work toward.

6. Give ambassadors real benefits

This is where I think you can make the program much stronger.

Don't make the benefits:

Certificate + exposure + experience.

That's generic.

Instead:

Personal brand

- Featured on Xolace platforms
- Ambassador spotlight
- Portfolio opportunities
- Recommendation letters for exceptional contributors
- LinkedIn recognition

Skills

Run actual workshops:

- Content creation
- Storytelling
- Mental-health communication
- Community building
- Social media
- AI tools
- Design
- Video production
- Public speaking

Access

Give top ambassadors:

- Founder sessions
- Product previews
- Beta access
- Campaign involvement
- Behind-the-scenes access
- Opportunities to work directly with Xolace's creative/product teams

Opportunities

The biggest benefit should be:

You get to build something real.

That's much more powerful than a certificate.

7. Build a proper points/reward system

I'd introduce something like:

Xolace Impact Points

Action	Points
Share campaign	5
Create original content	20
Bring an app user	25
Host community activity	50
Create campaign concept	40
Produce approved video	50
Recruit ambassador	30
Lead an event	75

Then:

500 points → Xolace merch

1,000 → Exclusive Xolace experience

2,500 → Featured Ambassador

5,000 → Fellowship/leadership opportunity

But I'd be careful about rewarding raw app installs too heavily. Xolace is dealing with something sensitive. You don't want ambassadors aggressively convincing vulnerable people to download a mental-health product just to earn points.

Reward quality contribution, not just acquisition.

8. Add a “What Ambassadors Actually Do” section

This should be extremely visual.

Something like:

You could...

-  Create a TikTok that makes someone feel understood.
-  Start a conversation on your campus.
-  Design something that makes emotional wellbeing easier to talk about.
-  Help produce a Xolace film.
-  Introduce someone to Xolace.
-  Host a mental-health awareness activity.
-  Bring an idea to the team.

This answers the question:

“Okay... but what am I actually signing up to do?”

9. Add real ambassador stories

This is probably one of the biggest missing opportunities.

Instead of only saying:

Join hundreds of ambassadors.

Show:

Meet Raymond.

“I joined Xolace because...”

Then:

What I worked on

What I learned

What I contributed

What happened because of it

You already have evidence that members are doing meaningful work. For example, Xolace has publicly highlighted peer-counseling training and the LEARN framework through its community work. (LinkedIn)

That should be turned into proof of what participation looks like.

10. Make the mental-health boundaries extremely clear

This is especially important for Xolace.

The main site currently does a good job saying Xolace isn't therapy and emphasizing privacy, anonymity and safety. (Xolace Inc.)

The ambassador program should have its own:

Ambassador Safety & Ethics

Ambassadors should understand:

- Don't diagnose people.
- Don't act as therapists.
- Don't promise confidentiality outside Xolace's actual systems.
- Don't pressure someone to disclose personal information.
- Don't exploit someone's vulnerable moment for content.
- Don't fabricate testimonials.
- Don't use someone's story without permission.

- Know when to refer someone to appropriate professional/emergency support.

This becomes mandatory onboarding, not a footnote.

11. Give ambassadors a content machine

This is where your Media/Production structure can become incredibly powerful.

Instead of:

“Go and promote Xolace.”

Give them:

THIS MONTH'S CAMPAIGN

Theme: Things We Don't Say Out Loud

Then provide:

5 TikTok concepts
3 carousel templates
2 story templates
1 conversation prompt
1 campus activation
1 Xolace feature to demonstrate

They don't have to invent everything.

They just execute creatively.

12. Create Ambassador-exclusive campaigns

For example:

“The Things We Don't Say”

Every ambassador asks people anonymously:

What's something you've wanted to say but haven't?

They collect responses.

Then Xolace turns the responses into:

- Social content
- Data insights
- Short films
- Quotes
- Campaigns
- Product inspiration

Now the ambassadors aren't just marketing Xolace.

They're helping Xolace understand people.

That's much more aligned with the product.

13. Connect the Ambassador Program directly to Xolace's product

This is the biggest strategic opportunity.

The Xolace product is built around:

“I don't know what I'm feeling.”

The ambassador program can be built around:

“Let's make it easier to talk about what we're feeling.”

So the ecosystem becomes:

Ambassador → Conversation → Awareness → Xolace → Reflection → Community

That's a much stronger loop than:

Ambassador → Flyer → Download

14. Add a “Why Xolace?” section

The ambassador page needs to answer:

Why should I care?

Not:

“Xolace is an innovative mental health platform.”

Instead:

Because somebody around you is carrying something they haven't said out loud.

Maybe you've been that person.

Maybe you still are.

We're building a space where people don't have to have the perfect words before they can begin.

That is much closer to the emotional language Xolace is already using successfully on its main site. (Xolace Inc.)

15. My ideal Ambassador landing page structure

I'd rebuild the page roughly like this:

HERO

Be part of something that helps people feel heard.

Join the Xolace Ambassador Program.

[Become an Ambassador]

SECTION 2

Why Xolace needs ambassadors

Short emotional explanation.

SECTION 3

What you can do

Creator | Community | Growth | Creative | Production | Advocacy

SECTION 4

How it works

01 Apply

02 Get accepted

03 Get trained

04 Choose your path

05 Complete missions

06 Grow with Xolace

SECTION 5

What you get

Skills + access + recognition + opportunities + community.

SECTION 6

Meet the ambassadors

Faces + stories.

SECTION 7

Your impact

Live numbers.

2,400 conversations started
18,000 people reached
1,200 new Xolacers

(Obviously only use real numbers.)

SECTION 8

Your first mission

Make the program feel tangible.

SECTION 9

Safety & responsibility

Very important for Xolace.

SECTION 10

Ready?

You don't have to be an expert.

You just have to care.

[Become a Xolace Ambassador]

One thing I'd change immediately

I'd move the Ambassador Program away from being perceived as a marketing volunteer program.

The strongest version of Xolace Ambassadors is:

a community of young creators, advocates, storytellers and builders helping Xolace understand people, start conversations and make emotional wellbeing easier to talk about.

That's a much more compelling proposition.

And it fits where Xolace appears to be heading: the app itself is increasingly positioned around reflection, peer connection, voice, personal patterns and real human listening—not simply an AI mental-health app. (App Store)

If I were prioritizing the website work, I'd do these five first:

1. Rewrite the hero/value proposition
2. Introduce Ambassador Tracks
3. Build the “How It Works” journey
4. Add real ambassador stories + proof
5. Create the mission/reward/dashboard system

That would make the program feel less like “join our ambassador WhatsApp group” and much more like “join a community that can actually help me grow while helping Xolace grow.”
